Hold! you know the hard command, I must obey: You only can withstand Your own mishap. I beg you, on my knee, Be not unhappy by your own decree. Aur. Speak, madam; by (if that be yet an oath) Your love, Im pleased we should be ruined both. Both is a sound of joy. In deaths dark bowers our bridals we will keep; And his cold hand Shall draw the curtain, when we go to sleep. Ind. Know then, that man, whom both of us did trust, Has been to you unkind, to me unjust. The guardian of my faith so false did prove, As to solicit me with lawless love: Prayed, promised, threatened, all that man could do; Base as hes great; and need I tell you who? Aur. Yes; for Ill not believe my father meant: Speak quickly, and my impious thoughts prevent. Ind. Youve said; I wish I could some other name! Arim. My duty must excuse me, sir, from blame. A guard there! Enter Guards. Aur. Slave, for me? Arim. My orders are To seize this princess, whom the laws of war Long since made prisoner. Aur. Villain! Arim. Sir, I know Your birth, nor durst another call me so. Aur. I have redeemed her; and, as mine, shes free. Arim. You may have right to give her liberty; But with your father, sir, that right dispute; For his commands to me were absolute, If she disclosed his love, to use the right Of war, and to secure her from your sight. Aur. Ill rescue her, or die. Draws. And you, my friends, though few, are yet too brave, To see your general.s mistress made a slave. All draw Ind. Hold, my dear love! if so much power there lies, As once you owned, in Indamoras eyes, Lose not the honour you have early won.

But stand the blameless pattern of a sop.
My love your claim inviolate secur...
