

Real Nigga Good Bruthah (1)

Detroit's homegrown Jamar Strong has a major struggle in his life. He's caught between the world of a real nigga and a good bruthah. The two women who have come along for the ride are reaching their breaking point but Jamar wants them both. By day he works part time as a tradesman, in the afternoon and evenings he operates a barbershop. He pays the bills and keeps food in the belly of his children. Jamar knows he is displaced in society but he wants to show his sons, his wife and his people there is a way through self-determination. By night he is a hood diplomat who believes in no laws, sheds his morals and pursues money by any means. With a pistol bonded to his side Jamar becomes no more and J-Bo lives in the streets, at the strip clubs, behind the gun, on the highway and in his heart. For a year Jamar and J-Bo clash, as is the case with many black men living in the inner city. Follow him through laughter, tears, joys, fear, pleasure and pain. This book is the story of your uncle, brother, father and friend.
