Simple enough, right? Just a walk from the house to Auditorium Shores for an early evening concert along the lake. With just a few fun snags. Art Day - Second of the four tests. Off for a day trip on the bus north of the river. Walk the art school grounds, take some sample art classes with clay and modeling. Oops. More fun snags. At the Beach - Third test. Day trip to Galveston Island. A little more daring. Traveling the Houston freeway to the beach. Not getting sunburned or bit by jelly fish. But with traffic so heavy that evening, whats the harm in going down to the West End, and getting a bite to eat by one of those pocket beach parks. Even if it is getting dark. The Slumber Party - Fourth and toughest test yet. A 4th of July sleep-over in the backyard. Separate tents for the boys and girls. A few extra friends showing up. Ok, a bunch. And the six cousins parents in the house, watching. But once its dark, whos gonna know the two oldest go off for a brief walk, and the tween girls want their friends to practice kissing on the two pre-tween boys? Fourth of July - Set further into the future, after the trip to Italy, and an extended stay in Paris. Another trip to Galveston, for a few days, but with two of the cousins parents. Its been typical terrible hot, dry, and the small low in the Gulf probably wont do much more than sprinkle or rain for a bit. But predicting storms along Galveston has never been easy. Or predictable.
